Asset Class Recap

Large cap value stocks added to their gains in the most recent fiscal quarter, albeit marginally, especially when considering performance over the prior two fiscal quarters. However, for the first time in three fiscal quarters, growth stocks outpaced their value counterparts, bringing the trailing one year performance between the two close to even as value stocks, as measured by the Russell 1000 Value Index, gained 39.3 percent, while growth stocks, as measured by the Russell 1000 Growth Index, rose 36.7 percent. The U.S. economy continued to rebound from the lows brought on by the COVID pandemic over a year ago, with industries such as retail, lodging, and travel leading markets higher. Unemployment continued to go down with both initial jobless claims, as well as continuing jobless claims, nearing pre-pandemic levels. Additionally, the Federal Reserve maintained their accommodative stance on monetary policy, stating that the historic inflation data reported throughout the period is transitory. Although investors largely shrugged off inflation concerns, the rapidly spreading COVID delta variant led to volatility towards the latter part of the fiscal quarter, with industries that have rebounded strongly, like cruise operators and airlines, to sell-off on fears of potential re-imposed lockdown measures. Over the most recent fiscal quarter ending July 31, 2021, large cap value stocks added 2.0 percent.

Allocation Review

The Sub-Adviser does not believe in taking large sector overweight and underweight bets, but rather seeks to find the best opportunities within each sector, driven by a bottom-up security selection process. With that being said, the largest contributor during the fiscal quarter was the consumer discretionary sector, with strong stock selection being the main factor here. Industries set to benefit from the economy re-opening, such as retail and restaurants, continued to climb higher, as restrictions to shop and dine eased. Following the consumer discretionary sector was the information technology sector, with stock selection positively contributing to performance. The largest detractor this fiscal quarter was the producer durables sector, as stock selection within this sector negatively affected performance. Industries such as airlines, machinery, and construction led the sector lower. Another sector that detracted from Fund performance this fiscal quarter was the materials sector, as stock selection and allocation hurt relative performance.

Holdings Insights

The largest contributor to Fund performance over the most recent fiscal quarter was Target Corporation (TGT) (holding weight*: 1.97 percent), an American general merchandise retailer offering home furnishing, apparel, accessories, electronics, food assortments, and other products. TGT's rise this fiscal quarter was primarily attributed to its comparable store sales growth, which grew 18 percent, and comparable digital sales growth, which grew 50 percent. The Sub-Adviser believes that TGT has the ability to capture more market share in the highly competitive retail industry, and their investments in their digital platform, coupled with efficient same-day services, positions them well compared to their peers. Over the fiscal quarter, TGT rose 26.0 percent. Another contributor to this fiscal quarter was Equity Lifestyle Properties (ELS) (holding weight*: 1.42 percent), gaining 20.8 percent. ELS is a real estate investment trust that operates more than 400 manufactured home communities, RV resorts, and campgrounds in the U.S. and British Columbia. ELS benefitted from the rise in demand for manufactured homes, as families and individuals exited major city centers and moved into the suburbs, with little need to commute into the office. While many have returned to work, some companies have permanently shifted their operations to be fully or partially remote, enabling employees to work wherever they please. Suburbs with more land and affordability are more attractive now than ever, with ELS poised to benefit from this trend. Furthermore, Alphabet Inc. (GOOGL) (holding weight*: 2.89 percent), otherwise known as Google, continued to be a strong performer in the Fund, rising 14.5 percent over the fiscal quarter. GOOGL is a multinational information technology company that offers internet-related services and products, including digital advertising, a search engine, and cloud computing. Growth was driven by elevated consumer online activity, and broad-based strength in advertisement spending.

The largest detractor to Fund performance over the most recent fiscal quarter was Southwest Airlines Co. (LUV) (holding weight*: 1.13 percent), an operator of airlines that provide transportation across the U.S. and nearby international markets. The surge in COVID cases, specifically tied to the delta variant, caused stocks in the airline industry to tank in the last couple of weeks of the fiscal quarter. The disappointing performance came after a run-up in which the stock rose nearly 150 percent. While LUV has suffered in recent weeks, the stock was well off its lows in March 2020. The Sub-Adviser maintains a position in LUV and will monitor the travel landscape as COVID cases pick-up. Over the fiscal quarter, LUV fell 19.5 percent. Other detractors from the producer durables sector were Caterpillar Inc. (CAT) (holding weight*: 1.11 percent), a manufacturer of construction and mining equipment, and (PWR) (holding weight*: 1.32 percent), a provider of contracting services across electric power, pipeline, industrial, and communications industries. CAT fell 9.4 percent, despite beating on revenue across all their business segments. CAT management believes that high manufacturing costs should cut into margins moving forward. PWR dropped 5.9 percent, as a reduction in client spending, as well as oil & gas volatility, led to a drawdown over the fiscal period. While consumer discretionary was the top contributing sector to Fund performance over the fiscal quarter, Altice USA Inc. (ATUS) (holding weight*: 1.07), a provider of broadband communications and video services, detracted from performance. ATUS slid 15.4 percent after it reported disappointing earnings that missed expectations, showing slowing sales growth.

Sub-Adviser Outlook

The Sub-Adviser believes that value stocks continue to be attractive as markets balance out after the large dislocation brought on by the COVID pandemic last spring. The Federal Reserve has remained accommodative, despite historic inflation data, which should provide a positive backdrop for those industries still recovering from the pandemic. However, valuations are higher than historical averages and regulatory concerns both domestically and abroad could potentially affect many industries. Additionally, the recent surge in COVID cases, specifically attributed to the highly contagious delta variant, remains a threat to economic growth worldwide. As always, the sub-adviser will stay true to its disciplined investment process and seek out companies trading at attractive valuations with improving business prospects.
